

Christmas

Can you think about Christmas without thinking about shopping? Possibly, but I'm sure that most of us can't because the whole association of Christmas with consumerism either drives us crazy when we think about it or crazy when we have to engage in the tradition of buying presents. These days many people are trying very creative ways of getting around it. Our own family has a kind of lottery about this time of year to decide who we're buying for. We each get one person and we each buy them one present and that's it for Christmas. The children do tend to get a little more but that tends to be an echo of the special place children have in grandparents' hearts. Others simply don't go there. Some people try to establish a tradition of giving outside the family to needy people in our community or communities in the third world. What a great idea. Perhaps one of the most disturbing trends these days is the age at which children are receiving quite sophisticated and valuable presents such as cell phones. I don't know about you but I just find it hard to imagine that a child under 10 would need a smart phone. Perhaps an older style cell phone would come in handy for parents but one that allows unhindered access to the internet is another issue all together. I suggest we need to be wise about these things and restrict access to screens of all kinds when children are young. We are doomed to have to sit in front of them as adults but it seems to me that with all the natural energy and life children have it is such a pity to provide ways for them to stay indoors and not enjoy the youthful bodies they have.
